As Vice President of Regulatory Policy at Greenleaf Health, Sean Hilscher brings 15+ years of experience in health care, having worked with a broad array of stakeholders including life science companies, data companies, providers, and international health organizations. Sean helps Greenleaf clients navigate the evolving regulatory policy landscape, conducting in-depth analyses of legislation, regulations, and regulatory initiatives and their impact on clients' products.

Previously, Sean served as a Director at the American College of Cardiology (ACC), where he managed a suite of real-world evidence platforms marketed to providers, payers, and life science companies. Sean has experience in strategy and operation consulting from his time at the Advisory Board Company. As a manager in the sourcing and operations practice, Sean led data analysis efforts for operational and supply chain consulting engagements with provider organizations across the country.

Sean earned his MBA from the Georgetown University McDonough School of Business and an MA in Politics, Philosophy, and Economics from the University of Oxford.
